The SERP or Search Engine Result Page or Search Engine Results Page refers to the first 20-50 pages of a Google search, where the 10 organic search results are ranked according to a website's URL. These can be accessed when a user searches from any search engine such as Google, Yahoo or Bing. Google Search Based Overview of the SERP: This page is the first page of search results (SERPs) that is displayed from a search query. This page gives visitors an overview of the 10 results that are displayed for the search query. About the 10 search results: Top 10 Search results are displayed under the following categories: Images, Videos, News Your search results Shopping Maps, Business, Travel, Local, Blogs, About 10 Result Results: These search results will help a user to find relevant information of his search. The 10 results which are displayed by the search engine will depend on the search query entered by the user. The 10 results are also called Organic Results, as the first 10 pages in a search are displayed as organic results. These results are shown for both the broad as well as the exact keywords. The order in which the results are displayed is based on different factors like the relevance, the position of the page in the search, the freshness of the page and many more. "Research" the 10 Search Results of Google: The order in which the Organic 10 search results are displayed is based on an algorithm (refer to next section). The order based on relevancy is called 'Knowledge Graph', and based on the freshness, it is known as 'Freshness' and so on. Also, if a user clicks on the 'Related Search', the search results will be displayed in a different order than the organic search results. The bottom line is that not all the organic 10 results are displayed based on the same factors. If someone clicks on a particular organic search result, that means that he/she likes what he/she has found and hence, that's why he/she is clicking that particular result.
