uanbrompdf19 A: In.NET if you use String.Format, the format provider needs to have an overload for that format. That means that the second parameter needs to be of Type StringFormat. You can see from the documentation of the NewStringFormat method that it needs a Type, the type of which you can't know. So in your case that means you need to use the more generic overload of `String.Format`, that allows you to specify the type of the second argument:

String.Format("{0}", myValue);

However this requires you to cast `myValue` to be of type `StringFormat`. That is why you have to use `String.Format((StringFormat)myValue)`; This forces the compiler to choose the `StringFormat` overload, because it know that it is not meant to be converted to `StringFormat`.

You could also do

String.Format(new StringFormat(myValue));
However it has the downside that if the C# compiler can generate a more specialized string based on the cast, it will do that. (In my tests that did not happen) Q:

NullPointerException from activity... but only when connected via USB cable I've got a simple app where I'm loading a string from a resource file into an EditText field in a subclass of the FragmentActivity. When I connect the phone via wifi, the app runs fine. But when I connect it using a USB cable, there's a NullPointerException on the line of code that loads the string from the resource. However, the app still runs fine, 6d1f23a050
